Security

Mobile healthcare and the cloud are opening new attack pathways into your network. And laws such as HIPAA and HITECH saddle healthcare providers with more and more information security requirements. Experian notes that 46% of all breaches its data resolution department serviced in 2013 were healthcare related and that is expected to rise.

The Year for Healthcare Cloud Adoption

As if healthcare IT wasn't complicated enough, the recent wave of mergers and acquisitions coupled with all new compliance demands are creating infrastructure challenges for healthcare IT professionals. And that doesn't even take into account exciting opportunities in the cloud. The HHS.gov site outlines that 69% of all individual cases affected by breaches have been from loss or theft of physical assets, 18% are from hacking or server theft, dispelling the idea that online theft lends itself to amplified breach numbers.

Patient Satisfaction / Experience

Patient experience is shaped by the interactions individuals have with healthcare organizations. To improve these important touch points, hospitals are integrating technology into patient care to provide a more engaging and helpful experience. This includes patient portals accessible from home, and digital signage, registration kiosks, tablets and displays that offer guidance and interaction—from check-in to recovery. With this more holistic approach, organizations can positively impact their patient satisfaction and HCAHPS scores.

Mobility

The mobile revolution has forever altered the ways we communicate and consume information. These seismic shifts are impacting healthcare more deeply than any sector of society. Healthcare providers are more in touch with their patients and more in touch with each other. 70% of physicians use their smartphone to research medications at least once a week. 3 million patients will be monitored via mobile networks by 2016.
